-Laurence Senelick, Cabaret Performance, Volume II: Europe 1920-1940 (Baltimore: John Hopkins University Press, 1993), p. 25. Bob Fosse's acclaimed film version of Cabaret (1972) gives a stylized but essentially accurate view of what cabaret entertainment was like in 1932 Berlin, with satiric sketches, torch songs, transvestitism and more. These shows had an intellectual punch which, with a few drinks, helped audiences push the harsh realities of life aside for a few hours.

This cabaret has the best location, right on the Champs Elysées. While still an adults-only show, Le Lido is less suggestive than other cabarets, with tap dancing, clowns, laser effects, a cowboy show, and sometimes acrobatic ice skating. This performance is closer in style to a Las Vegas spectacle than a traditional cabaret, and many ...
